WRITING

Everyone in the world knows the beginning of William Shakespeare's Comedy: „All the world's a stage, and all the men and women are merely players“. But what is the meaning of this quotation?

In my opinion, the writer wanted to say that each of us is born with a strict social role that can't be changed and that all our lives are parts of a big play called history, which means everything is already predicted and we are not able to influence on our future.

I disagree with this idea. I think, people are writers of their lives and our future is in our hands.

First of all, we have the freedom of choice. For instance, we can choose a school and university, where we will study, and a sphere of life to work in. Secondly, our decisions influence our life and sometimes they even change the history of mankind. For example, in 1812 after the battle on the Kulikov field Kutuzov decided not to defend Moscow but leave it and let Napoleon enter the city. This act had an influence on the history as it saved the Russian army and weakened the French. And lastly, people always have a chance to change their social roles. For instance, Janna d'Ark, who was born in a poor family, was supposed to spend her life at a villoge. But instead she became a famous warrior and the savior of the France.

In conclusion I would like to say that our future is in our hands, so think properly when you make a decision.
