WRITING

"All the world's a stage, and all the men and women are merely players." William Shakespeare is trying to tell us that, despite the fact our life is not a theatre, we still put on masks and play roles of people we have to be in order to ~~success~~ ^{success} in life. Being authentic is difficult.

I share the same point of view with the writer. One person cannot always be the same. One's behavior changes, depending on the situations. If a person needs something from other people, he / her will try to be more polite with them. For example, my mother had a co-worker who ~~has~~ ^{had} been trying to desperately to get a promotion. She ~~was~~ ^{is} This co-worker hated the boss and used to tell her colleagues only bad ~~words~~ ^{things} about him. However, when she was speaking to him directly, she was always giving him compliments and asking about his family and health. Thus, she got the promotion and had never talked to him this way again.

Sometimes we are players because we don't want others to see our true emotions. As humans, we may feel sad. In order not to make other people feel this way ^{too}, we hide our feelings and act like everything is fine. For example, one famous singer, Halsey, had a terrible accident. She lost her child right before her performance. She seemed to be happy while singing on the stage, but deep down in her heart she had a lot of pain. Halsey didn't want to show it because millions of people, watching her live, ~~would be unhappy~~ ^{would feel sad} as well.

All in all, people do play different roles ~~in~~ ^{throughout} their lives. That is how our world works. William Shakespeare was definitely right when claiming this thought.
