WRITING

The theatre of life

Can you imagine a theatre, where everyone can choose roles for themselves, where everyone wears a lot of different masks, where actors play simple roles as it may seem, but that is what the theatre stands on. I'm talking about the world.

William Shakespeare once said: „All the world's a stage, and all the men and women are merely players.“ This point of view is quiet philosophical, but I'm not the one, so that's how I understand those words: all the people on earth make their job for society, even children, whose role is to study and grow. We can easily compare a man with an actor. He may be a great engineer at his workplace, he is comfortable in those decorations and mask and he might be a bad player in different ones, for example as husband and father. Anywhere he is, anything he does - he plays a role.

Every day in the world a lot of things happen: some people bear, some die, economical and political events decide people's doom, someone can have a tragedy, someone can marry, but from the global point of view it's nothing more than another scene.
